

Indigenous women protest Bolsonaro in Brasilia

Brasilia, August 14 (RHC)-- In Brazil, up to 2,000 indigenous women gathered in the capital Brasília this week to protest the policies of far-right President Jair Bolsonaro. Hundreds occupied a health ministry building Tuesday as they demanded the government respect indigenous rights and the Amazon.

Joênia Wapichana, the first indigenous woman elected to the Brazilian Congress, told reporters: "Protest is an important act to defend the rights of indigenous peoples. We are under a series of systematic, violent attacks. There's the lack of demarcation of indigenous lands, the issue of health, education. This is all in danger. We are fighting against privatizing, for a fairer and quality education."

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/199034-indigenous-women-protest-bolsonaro-in-brasilia>

Radio Habana Cuba