

Former TV host accuses Donald Trump of rape and sues for defamation

New York, November 5 (RHC)-- Advice columnist and former television host E. Jean Carroll has sued U.S. President Donald Trump for defamation, after he denied raping her in the 1990s.

Carroll has accused Trump of forcibly kissing, then raping her in the dressing room of Bergdorf Goodman department store in New York. Trump has claimed that he did not know and had never met Carroll, despite a photo showing the two of them together at a party in the 1980s.

Carroll told reporters that she's filing the defamation suit "on behalf of every woman who has ever been harassed, assaulted, silenced, or spoken up only to be shamed, fired, ridiculed and belittled. No person in this country should be above the law – including the president."

Over the past several years, more than 20 women have accused Donald Trump of rape, assault or sexual misconduct.
