

Wildfires rage across Australia as former officials warn of climate crisis

Sydney, November 15 (RHC)-- In Australia, the death toll from raging wildfires has risen to four, as a group of former fire chiefs said their attempts to warn Prime Minister Scott Morrison about the dangers of climate change have been ignored for months.

Greg Mullins, the former fire commissioner for New South Wales, called for the federal government to provide more resources. Mullens said: "We're also calling on the government to take urgent action on the fundamental problem that's leading to these catastrophic fires, and that's climate change."
