

European Commission proposes sweeping European Green Deal

Brussels, December 12 (RHC)-- The European Commission has proposed a sweeping new plan to address the climate crisis. European Commission President Ursula von der Leyen said that the European Green Deal would be the biggest overhaul of European policy since the foundation of the modern European Union system.

The Green Deal would seek to have Europe become the first climate-neutral continent by 2050. It would also seek to halve greenhouse gas emissions by 2030. European leaders are discussing the emissions goals at a summit in Brussels today.

Environmentalists at COP25 in Madrid, Spain, welcomed the plan but said it does not go far enough in cutting greenhouse gas emissions. Greenpeace campaigner Martin Kaiser said: "The new Green Deal proposed by the commission is not an adequate answer to the climate emergency we see already in Europe."
