

White House to require Trump loyalty test for political appointees

Washington, March 5 (RHC)-- CNN reports that Donald Trump's new personnel chief is distributing questionnaires to potential political appointees to verify their loyalty to the president.

As part of the Trump "litmus test," candidates must explain what part of Trump's campaign "most appealed" to them.

The campaign to identify and purge anti-Trump staffers is being led by 29-year-old John McEntee, whom Trump recently appointed head of the Presidential Personnel Office. Before he was rehired this year, McEntee was fired in 2018 by then-Chief of Staff John Kelly because he was under federal investigation for financial crimes.
