

Air pollution plummets worldwide amid health lockdowns

New Delhi, April 10 (RHC)-- In environmental news, the snow-capped Himalayas are visible from cities in northern India for the first time in 30 years, as pollution levels have dropped dramatically since the enactment of a nationwide coronavirus lockdown.

Meanwhile, the U.S. city of Los Angeles saw some of the cleanest air of any city in the world this week, as the dark smog and pollution that usually clouds the city's skyline have dissipated under California's strict stay-at-home measures.

In other news, the Donald Trump administration is set to open more than 100 national wildlife refuges to hunting and fishing. The plan would allow fishing for the first time at several wildlife refuges, including the San Diego Bay and the Everglades Headwaters in Florida.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/219429-air-pollution-plummets-worldwide-amid-health-lockdowns>

Radio Habana Cuba