

British prime minister says UK coronavirus lockdown to remain in place until June 1st

London, May 11 (RHC)-- British Prime Minister Boris Johnson said on Sunday that the UK's coronavirus lockdown will be in place until at least June 1st, as he unveiled cautious plans to lift restrictions imposed seven weeks ago.

"This is not the time simply to end the lockdown this week," Johnson said in a televised address. "Instead we are taking the first careful steps to modify our measures."

From Monday, those who cannot work from home will be actively encouraged to go to work, he said, and from Wednesday people will be allowed to take unlimited amounts of outdoor exercise as long as they adhere to social distancing guidelines.

The British prime minister said: "You can sit in the sun in your local park, you can drive to other destinations, you can even play sports but only with members of your own household."
