

Los Angeles Times settles racial bias complaints

Los Angeles, June 27 (RHC)-- The Los Angeles Times is settling a proposed class-action lawsuit brought by six Black and Latinx journalists arguing the paper's underrepresentation of people of color in the newsroom is a result of long-standing discriminatory pay practices.

Earlier this week, Black L.A. Times journalists called out the newspaper with the hashtag #BlackatLAT to share their experiences with racism at the paper. The following day, L.A. Times staff held a near five-hour forum pushing executive editor Norman Pearlstine and other L.A. Times leadership to propose sweeping changes at the paper addressing decades of "neglect" against journalists of color, and to foster a more inclusive and equitable newsroom.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/226948-los-angeles-times-settles-racial-bias-complaints>

Radio Habana Cuba