

Trump considers blocking U.S. citizens returning home if infection feared

Washington, August 12 (RHC)-- The administration of U.S. President Donald Trump is considering a measure to block U.S. citizens and permanent residents from returning home if they are suspected of being infected with the new coronavirus, according to the New York Times and Reuters News Agency.

The draft regulation would give the government authorisation to block individuals who could "reasonably" be believed to have contracted COVID-19 or other diseases.

Trump has instituted a series of sweeping immigration restrictions since the start of the coronavirus pandemic, suspending some legal immigration and allowing US border authorities to rapidly deport migrants caught at the border without standard legal processes.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/231376-trump-considers-blocking-us-citizens-returning-home-if-infection-feared>

Radio Habana Cuba