

Amazon accused of price gouging after raising prices 1,000% during lockdown

Image not found or type unknown

New York, September 12 (RHC)-- A new report finds Amazon set prices for essential products during the COVID-19 pandemic at levels that would violate price gouging laws in many U.S. states.

Public Citizen reports Amazon marked up some goods by as much as 1,000% over the expected price at a time when millions of people were forced to shop online due to remain-at-home orders.

Meanwhile, a new Oxfam report finds Amazon CEO Jeff Bezos could personally pay each of his 876,000 employees a six-figure bonus -- that would be at least $100,000 -- and still have more wealth than he controlled at the start of the pandemic.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/233944-amazon-accused-of-price-gouging-after-raising-prices-1000-during-lockdown>

Radio Habana Cuba