

Healthcare workers in West Bank receive vaccines while other Palestinians wait

Image not found or type unknown

Healthcare workers in West Bank receive vaccines while other Palestinians wait

Ramallah, February 5 (RHC)-- Coronavirus vaccinations have started in the occupied West Bank after Israel transferred the first batch of a total of 5,000 doses to inoculate frontline Palestinian health workers, after coming under fire for refusing to share its vaccines with Palestinians.

One West Bank resident, Aisha Salem, commenting on the arrival of vaccines told reporters: “The vaccine is good, but they are only giving it to the healthcare workers, not to the public.”

The Occupied Territories are also expecting to receive 37,000 doses of the Pfizer-BioNTech vaccine through the World Health Organization’s COVAX scheme in mid-February.

In the U.S., freshman New York Congressman Jamaal Bowman called on Israel to vaccinate all Palestinians. He wrote: “As a Black man living in America, I know the feeling of being neglected by my government, and society, of feeling like a second-class citizen or not a citizen at all.”

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/246824-healthcare-workers-in-west-bank-receive-vaccines-while-other-palestinians-wait>

Radio Habana Cuba