

President of Mexico reappears after overcoming COVID-19 disease

Image not found or type unknown

Mexico City, February 9 (RHC)-- Mexico's president, Andrés Manuel López Obrador, resumed his official activities this Monday in his morning conference after recovering from COVID-19, which he was diagnosed with on January 24.

"Here we are to continue fighting, to also thank many friends from abroad and all the people of Mexico, women, men, who expressed their desire for me to recover and move forward," he said from the National Palace. López Obrador added that he is grateful for "their blessings, their prayers, their good vibes to everyone. As José Martí used to say: Love is repaid with love."

The Mexican leader reiterated that he is in struggle to continue with his work to promote the transformation he is carrying out with his government, as well as in the work to fight corruption. "We are going to continue with the transformation process that is fundamental for Mexico that we can put an end to corruption so that in this way the country is moralized and we can live with wellbeing and happiness."

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/247090-president-of-mexico-reappears-after-overcoming-covid-19-disease>

Radio Habana Cuba