

Two New York Times journalists resign following revelations of improper conduct

New York, February 10 (RHC)-- Two prominent journalists at The New York Times have left the newspaper after recent revelations of improper behavior.

Veteran reporter Donald McNeil Jr. was recently called out for using the N-word and making racist and sexist comments on a work-related trip with high school students.

Meanwhile, Andy Mills, co-creator and co-host of the podcast "Caliphate," resigned after allegations surfaced of inappropriate behavior toward female colleagues when he previously worked at WNYC. "Caliphate," a hit podcast about life inside the Islamic State, came under fire recently after the Times admitted it contained major inaccuracies, causing the Pulitzer Prize Board to rescind its status as a 2019 prize finalist.
