

Joe Biden renews U.S. national emergency and sanctions against Iran

Image not found or type unknown

U.S. President Joe Biden signs an executive order with Vice President Kamala Harris at the State Dining Room of the White House. (Photo: AFP)

Washington, March 7 (RHC)-- U.S. President Joe Biden has extended for another year the "national emergency" declared in 1995 with respect to Iran as well as comprehensive sanctions against the Islamic Republic.

In a letter sent to U.S. House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, Biden said: "I have determined that it is necessary to continue the national emergency declared in Executive Order 12957 with respect to Iran and to maintain in force comprehensive sanctions against Iran to respond to this threat," according to the White House.

He also claimed that the actions and policies of the Iranian government pose an unusual and extraordinary threat to the national security, foreign policy, and economy of the United States.

The U.S. president further alleged that Tehran is proliferating and developing "missiles and other asymmetric and conventional weapons capabilities," supporting "terrorist groups" and maintaining what it called "network and campaign of regional aggression."

The administration of former U.S. President Trump unilaterally abandoned the nuclear deal, formally called the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action (JCPOA) in May 2018, and unleashed the so-called "maximum pressure campaign" with the stated objective of forcing Iran to negotiate "a better agreement."

Tehran refused to bow down to pressure and threats and responded to Washington's pressure policy with "maximum resistance."

President Joe Biden has indicated his government's willingness to return to the agreement, but Washington has been dragging its feet on taking any meaningful measure to undo the former U.S. government's wrongs.

The U.S. president, who had said Trump's maximum-pressure policy was "maximum failure," has not changed that policy, with Tehran saying "Washington is addicted to pressure, sanctions and bullying, and it does not work with Iran."

The US is demanding to see changes from Tehran before Washington would consider lifting the sanctions, as demanded by Iran. The new US government has kept the "maximum pressure" in place while calling for negotiations.

The Islamic Republic says there is no need for talks on Washington's return to the JCPOA, and that America only needs to remove the sanctions for gaining the right to rejoin the deal.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/249844-joe-biden-renews-us-national-emergency-and-sanctions-against-iran>

Radio Habana Cuba