

Amazon overnight workers walk off job to protest exploitation

Image not found or type unknown

Amazon overnight workers walk off job to protest exploitation

Chicago, April 10 (RHC)-- In the U.S. city of Chicago, Amazon overnight workers have walked off the job to protest what's known as the "megacycle." The 10-and-a-half-hour workshift, which rolled out across the U.S. in the past year, has been devastating for Amazon workers with health issues and those with daytime commitments such as child care.

In related news, the National Labor Relations Board found Amazon illegally fired two employees after they publicly called for the company to address concerns about working conditions at its warehouses and to enact better policies on climate change.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/253577-amazon-overnight-workers-walk-off-job-to-protest-exploitation>

Radio Habana Cuba