

U.S. Pressuring Police to Keep Powerful Spy Tools Secret

Washington, June 13 (RHC)-- A new report reveals the Barack Obama administration is pressuring local police departments to conceal information about powerful surveillance technology they are using to vacuum up cellphone data from entire neighborhoods.

The Associated Press reports that the White House has taken the unusual step of interfering in routine state public records requests and criminal trials to prevent information about the technology from getting out.

The secrecy surrounds equipment like "Stingray" spy devices, which trick cellphones into transmitting a user's location and identifying information to police.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/25714-us-pressuring-police-to-keep-powerful-spy-tools-secret>

Radio Habana Cuba