

British court reopens door to Julian Assange extradition

Image not found or type unknown

Julian Assange is charged under a U.S. law with espionage

London, July 8 (RHC)-- The United Kingdom's High Court has granted the Joe Biden administration the right to appeal a lower court's ruling blocking the extradition of WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange to the United States.

This comes as The Wall Street Journal reports U.S. officials have given assurances to the U.K. that Julian Assange wouldn't be held in a "supermax" prison if extradited to the United States.

On Wednesday, Assange's fiancée Stella Morris called on the Biden administration to end its pursuit of Assange. Stella Morris told reporters: "The lawyers of Julian were spied on. Their offices were broken into. Even our 6-month-old baby was targeted while he was in the embassy. And now the High Court has limited the grounds on which they are allowed to appeal. So the case is falling apart. ... If the Biden administration is serious about respecting the rule of law, the First Amendment and defending global press freedom, the only thing it can do is drop this case. This case is the most vicious attack on global press freedom in history."

Julian Assange, who is an Australian/Ecuadoran citizen, faces up to 175 years in prison in the U.S. for violations of the Espionage Act related to the publication of classified documents exposing U.S. war crimes.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/263244-british-court-reopens-door-to-julian-assange-extradition>

Radio Habana Cuba