

U.S. court allows Biden to continue mass expulsions without due process

Image not found or type unknown

Immigrant justice advocates are condemning a federal appeals court's ruling that will allow the Biden administration to continue mass expelling asylum seekers without due process under Title 42, citing the pandemic as justification.

Washington, October 1 (RHC)-- Immigrant justice advocates are condemning a federal appeals court's ruling that will allow the Biden administration to continue mass expelling asylum seekers without due process under Title 42, citing the pandemic as justification.

Last month, a lower court issued a temporary ban on the Trump-era policy, which was set to go into effect today. Attorney Lee Gelernt, who led the ACLU's lawsuit against Title 42, said: "If the administration is making the political calculation that if it acts inhumanely now it can act more humanely later, that calculation is misguided and of little solace to the families that are being sent to Haiti or brutalized in Mexico right now."

This comes as CBS News reports the Biden administration has deported at least 5,400 Haitian asylum seekers using Title 42 in the last 11 days.

Meanwhile, four United Nations agencies, including the Human Rights Office, are urging countries to stop deporting Haitian asylum seekers without first properly assessing their claims, a violation of international law.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/272326-us-court-allows-biden-to-continue-mass-expulsions-without-due-process>

Radio Habana Cuba