La Paz, December 1 (RHC)-- The president of the Movement Towards Socialism/Political Instrument for the Sovereignty of the Peoples (MAS-IPSP) of Bolivia, Evo Morales, described as impressive the March for the Homeland in defense of the government presided by Luis Arce.

In an exclusive interview for teleSUR, during the program Es Noticia, the former Bolivian president warned that since the results of the presidential elections in favor of President Arce were known, over one year ago, the right wing has tried to look for different ways to carry out another coup d'état.

Evo Morales added that during the March for the Homeland, which arrived to the city of La Paz on Monday after traveling more than 188 kilometers in seven days, participants of the mobilization asked him not to abandon the process to avoid further destabilization actions.

"On the way, some brothers were telling me: "Evo, defend us. There cannot be another coup d'état. Do not abandon the process, defend the homeland," he said and stressed that every day people continued to join the march along the way.

Evo Morales recalled that after the 2019 coup d'état, the right wing sought to reinstate the 1994 Constitution and leave behind the Magna Carta that recognizes the Plurinational State.

"When it comes to defending the Patria, the homeland unites us all (...) When they reject the Plurinational State it is because they want to reinstate the colonial State," he said and added that the right wing has always tried to divide them.

Likewise, he recalled that "in the past there was no lack of traitors. Under the leadership of Lucho and David we are united. The homeland is a factor of unity. This march for the homeland is for love of the homeland, for the love of Bolivia."
