

El Salvador frees women jailed for homicide after miscarriages

Image not found or type unknown

In El Salvador, three women serving 30 years in prison under the country's strict anti-abortion laws have been released. The three women had been convicted and sentenced to decades behind bars for having obstetric emergencies.

San Salvador, December 28 (RHC)-- In El Salvador, three women serving 30 years in prison under the country's strict anti-abortion laws have been released. The three women had been convicted and sentenced to decades behind bars for having obstetric emergencies.

El Salvador has had a total ban on abortion since 1998. Dozens have been arrested and imprisoned, accused of inducing abortions after having stillbirths, miscarriages and other obstetric emergencies. The three women's release comes after a November ruling from the Inter-American Court of Human Rights saying El Salvador's government had violated the rights of a woman identified as Manuela, who was arrested in 2008 on charges of provoking an abortion and died in prison two years later.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/281144-el-salvador-frees-women-jailed-for-homicide-after-miscarriages>

Radio Habana Cuba