Canada's second-most populous province has announced a nighttime curfew will be implemented as coronavirus infections continue to surge.

Ottawa, December 31 (RHC)-- Canada's second-most populous province has announced a nighttime curfew will be implemented as coronavirus infections continue to surge. Quebec Premier Francois Legault said the 10pm-5am EST curfew would begin on New Year's Eve on Friday.

In addition, restaurants will no longer be allowed to offer in-person dining, most private gatherings will be prohibited, and all indoor sports activities will be suspended, among other measures.

"Our experts tell us that there's a risk that we won't be able to treat all those who need it in the coming weeks. I know we're all tired, but it's my responsibility to protect [us] from this," Legault told reporters during a news conference.
