

U.S. Navy to stop operations at Hawaiian fuel facility that sickened military families

Image not found or type unknown

The U.S. Navy has finally agreed to an order from state officials in Hawaii to drain a massive underground storage facility near the Pearl Harbor Navy base following a large leak.

Honolulu, January 13 (RHC)-- The U.S. Navy has finally agreed to an order from state officials in Hawaii to drain a massive underground storage facility near the Pearl Harbor Navy base following a large leak.

State health officials recently found petroleum levels 350 times the safe limit in a water system that serves over 90,000 families near Pearl Harbor. Navy leaders were grilled about the water contamination during a congressional hearing on Capitol Hill.

Military families had demanded action after getting sick from drinking the water, with some having to be hospitalized.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/282687-us-navy-to-stop-operations-at-hawaiian-fuel-facility-that-sickened-military-families>

Radio Habana Cuba