

U.S. prisoners say they were unwillingly given Ivermectin as medical experiment

Image not found or type unknown

Little Rock, January 21 (RHC)-- In the U.S. state of Arkansas, four prisoners held at the County Jail have filed a lawsuit alleging they were unknowingly prescribed the drug ivermectin as a form of medical experimentation.

Little Rock, January 21 (RHC)-- In the U.S. state of Arkansas, four prisoners held at the County Jail have filed a lawsuit alleging they were unknowingly prescribed the drug Ivermectin as a form of medical experimentation.

Ivermectin is an antiparasitic widely used as a horse dewormer. It's been touted in right-wing media as a miracle cure to COVID-19, even though there's no experimental data to back the claim.

The ACLU of Arkansas condemned the actions of Washington County Sheriff Tim Helder and a jail physician, writing: "No one — including incarcerated individuals — should be deceived and subject to medical experimentation. Sheriff Helder has a responsibility to provide food, shelter, and safe, appropriate care to incarcerated individuals."

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/283616-us-prisoners-say-they-were-unwillingly-given-ivermectin-as-medical-experiment>

Radio Habana Cuba