

U.S. bombed Syrian dam in 2017 despite warning that tens of thousands could die

Image not found or type unknown

Image Credit: RodiSaid/Reuters

Washington, January 21 (RHC)-- The U.S. military bombed a massive Euphrates River dam in Syria in 2017 despite a military report warning such an attack could lead to a flood that would kill tens of thousands of civilians.

According to The New York Times, which reports the attack on the 18-story Tabqa Dam led to critical equipment failure, the bombing caused a reservoir to rise and prompted panicked evacuations downstream.

At the time, the commander of the U.S. offensive dismissed reports that the U.S. was responsible as “crazy reporting.” In fact, it has now been revealed the U.S. was responsible, and even selected at least one concrete-penetrating bunker-buster bomb for the attack. A follow-up U.S. airstrike reportedly killed three workers who rushed to the dam to prevent a disaster.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/283652-us-bombed-syrian-dam-in-2017-despite-warning-that-tens-of-thousands-could-die>

Radio Habana Cuba