

More than one-quarter of women worldwide have experienced domestic violence

London, February 21 (RHC)-- Over one in four women in the world have experienced domestic violence before they turn 50. That's according to a new study published by The Lancet medical journal, which compiled statistics on physical and sexual violence against women from the years 2000 to 2018.

Data was based on self-reported experiences, and authors warn the real scale of the crisis may be far worse, as many cases are not reported due to stigma and fear.

The COVID-19 pandemic likely exacerbated domestic violence, with women and girls often forced to stay home with their abusers without access to support services.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/286895-more-than-one-quarter-of-women-worldwide-have-experienced-domestic-violence>

Radio Habana Cuba