

Truth Commission in Colombia documents 450,000 deaths and strongly criticizes U.S. role in backing violence

Image not found or type unknown

Colombia's Truth Commission has estimated that over 450,000 people were killed in Colombia between 1985 and 2018 during a time when the United States was a key backer of the Colombian military and right-wing paramilitaries which targeted leftist groups, social justice leaders and union members.

Bogota, June 30 (RHC)-- Colombia's Truth Commission has estimated that over 450,000 people were killed in Colombia between 1985 and 2018 during a time when the United States was a key backer of the Colombian military and right-wing paramilitaries which targeted leftist groups, social justice leaders and union members.

The Truth Commission's report denounced the U.S.-funded war on drugs in Colombia, stating: "The consequences of this concerted and largely U.S.-driven approach [led to a] hardening of the conflict in which the civilian population has been the main victim."

Rev. Francisco de Roux, who led the Truth Commission, told reporters: "To the government, public forces, political parties, entrepreneurs, churches, educators and other decision makers in Colombia: We ask you to recognize the drug trafficking penetration in our culture, in the state, politics and economy, and face it as a nation. We must develop investigative tools to face the alliances system and involved interests, and we must change the war politics that attack those who are the weakest link -- the farmers."

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/292134-truth-commission-in-colombia-documents-450000-deaths-and-strongly-criticizes-us-role-in-backing-violence>

Radio Habana Cuba