

Unipolar order is disappearing, according to Syrian and Iranian presidents

Image not found or type unknown

Unipolar order is disappearing, according to Syrian and Iranian presidents

Havana, April 9 (RHC) - The presidents of Syria, Bashar Al-Assad, and of Iran, Ibrahim Raisi, today considered that the unipolar order is on the way to its demise, thanks to the peoples and countries that cling to their sovereignty and dignity.

According to the national television Al-Suriya, both presidents reviewed in a telephone conversation the bilateral relations, the regional events and the positive political atmosphere prevailing in the Region in general.

They considered that the stability of the region depends on healthy relations between their countries, and this is achieved through permanent dialogue, respect for sovereignty and the promotion of common interests.

The two rulers addressed the attacks by the Israeli occupation forces against the Al-Aqsa Mosque and worshipers. These attacks reflect the aggressive policy of the Israeli entity and prove its weakness in the face of the strength of the resistance and the courage of the Palestinian people, they said.

The Persian president said that fighting terrorism involves supporting Syria's sovereignty and territorial integrity. (Source: Prensa Latina)

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/319161-unipolar-order-is-disappearing-according-to-syrian-and-iranian-presidents>

Radio Habana Cuba