

Self-groping videos go viral in Italy after high school staffer cleared of assaulting student

Image not found or type unknown

In Italy, outrage is mounting after a judge cleared a school employee of groping a 17-year-old student, arguing the assault didn't constitute a crime because it lasted less than 10 seconds. The student from a Rome high school reported the 66-year-old employee after the incident last year.

Rome, July 14 (RHC)-- In Italy, outrage is mounting after a judge cleared a school employee of groping a 17-year-old student, arguing the assault didn't constitute a crime because it lasted less than 10 seconds. The student from a Rome high school reported the 66-year-old employee after the incident last year.

The high school employee admitted to touching the student without consent, but claimed it was a "joke." Social media users have responded by posting videos in which they grope themselves for 10 seconds, accompanied by hashtags which translate to #10seconds and #briefgroping.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/328412-self-groping-videos-go-viral-in-italy-after-high-school-staffer-cleared-of-assaulting-student>

Radio Habana Cuba