Buenos Aires, January 31 (RHC)-- An Argentinian court has overturned labor regulations proposed by newly elected far-right President Javier Milei that would have cut benefits and made it easier to fire workers who participate in union strikes and blockades.

The three-judge panel argued such reforms are unconstitutional, stating they first must be approved by Argentina's Congress.

The ruling comes just days after labor unions led tens of thousands of protesters in a general strike against Milei's austerity policies that have led to the severe devaluation of the Argentinian peso and other massive spending cuts.
