Chess

Cuban chess players have shown stable results in the past few years to rank the nation as one of the world's powerhouses in this sport as well as being the strongest team in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Those results are closely associated with the performance of Leinier Domínguez, who is currently ranked 11th on the International Chess Federation's list, thanks to a 2,760 point ELO, making him the best Latin American player on the list.

Domínguez started off this year with an excellent performance as he finished 5th at the Tata Steel tournament hosted by the Dutch city of Wijk aan Zee, where he won 6 points in 11 games.

The performance and progress of Cuban chess also stems from the Capablanca In Memoriam Tournament hosted by this Caribbean nation, and regarded as the strongest regional competition that honors Cuba's best chess player ever, José Raúl Capablanca, who was born in Havana on November 19th, 1888, and remained as world champion from 1921 through 1927.

At the latest Capablanca In Memoriam tournament, held last May, the Elite Group went down in history with the highest ELO average, of 2,721 points, for which it was included in FIDE's 19th category.

With 6.5 points in 10 games, Wesley So, from the Philippines, won the tournament, followed by the Cubans Lázaro Bruzón (5,5) and Leinier Domínguez (5.0).

The latest credential added by Cuban chess was the performance of its men's team at the recent World Chess Olympiad hosted by the Norwegian city of Tromso, where it finished 7th to equal their country's best performance ever at this competition.

The Cuban team came ahead of nations like the United States, France and the Netherlands and did much better than in Istanbul 2 years ago when it was 11th with 7 wins, 2 draws and 2 defeats in a tournament that gathered 1,900 competitors from 174 nations.

The results at Tromso ratified Cuba as Latin America's chess powerhouse. Argentina was the region's 2nd best at the recent Olympiad, finishing 18th, followed by Peru (19), Brazil (22), Colombia (41) and Venezuela (42).

However, Cuba's women's team did not do as well, tallying 6 wins, 1 draw and 4 defeats and finishing 30th, a result well below expectations as they were 4th at the Olympiad hosted by the Russian city of Khanty Mansiysk in 2010.

Russia's female team secured their 3rd consecutive title by beating Bulgaria in the last round followed by China and Ukraine.

Cuba's performance so far this year has reconfirmed its standing as one of the most respected nations in the world of chess.
