

The Lancet reports an estimated 186,000 Palestinians may have been killed in Israeli genocidal war on Gaza

Image not found or type unknown

London, July 8 (RHC)-- A leading general medical journal has estimated that the death toll from Israel's genocidal war on the Gaza Strip could be 186,000 or even more, translating to 7.9 percent of the population in the Palestinian territory.

In a report published in London, The Lancet said the figure includes both direct and indirect deaths from the Israeli onslaught and those still buried under the rubble in the besieged Gaza. The journal added that it had applied a conservative estimate of four indirect deaths per one direct death reported by the Gaza Health Ministry.

“It is not implausible to estimate that up to 186,000 or even more deaths could be attributable to the current conflict in Gaza,” it said.

According to the Gaza Health Ministry, the Tel Aviv regime has so far killed at least 38,514 Palestinians, mostly women and children, in Gaza. The figure provided by the ministry is “likely an underestimate,” The Lancet said.

“The total death toll is expected to be large given the intensity of this conflict; destroyed health-care infrastructure; severe shortages of food, water, and shelter; the population’s inability to flee to safe places; and the loss of funding to UNRWA, one of the very few humanitarian organizations still active in the Gaza Strip.”

It also called for an immediate and urgent ceasefire in Gaza accompanied by measures to enable the distribution of medical supplies, food, clean water, and other resources for basic human needs.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/359521-the-lancet-reports-an-estimated-186000-palestinians-may-have-been-killed-in-israeli-genocidal-war-on-gaza>

Radio Habana Cuba