

Climate groups call for moratorium on deep sea mining

Image not found or type unknown

Image Credit: Greenpeace

Kingston, July 17 (RHC)-- Environmental groups have renewed calls for a ban on deep sea mining as the International Seabed Authority opened its annual summit in Jamaica.

More than two dozen nations attending the talks have called for a moratorium on deep sea mining, which creates massive sediment plumes and can devastate marine ecosystems.

In a statement, the Deep Sea Conservation Coalition wrote, “The deep ocean sustains crucial processes that make the entire planet habitable, from driving ocean currents that regulate our weather to storing carbon and buffering our planet against the impacts of climate change.”

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/360251-climate-groups-call-for-moratorium-on-deep-sea-mining>

Radio Habana Cuba