

Trump allies gleefully flaunt rar-right plans in wake of U.S. elections, saying Project 2025 is the agenda

Image not found or type unknown

Former White House adviser and right-wing ideologue Steve Bannon

Washington, November 12 (RHC)-- Donald Trump's allies are celebrating last week's victory with calls to implement the far-right policy plan to overhaul the federal government, known as "Project 2025."

Former White House adviser Steve Bannon has amplified a message by the far-right podcast host Matt Walsh, who tweeted: "Now that the election is over, I think we can finally say that yeah actually Project 2025 is the agenda. Lol."

In related news, a U.S. federal judge loyal to Trump has struck down a Biden administration policy that would grant undocumented spouses of U.S. citizens a pathway to U.S. citizenship without having to leave the country.

Trump-appointed Judge J. Campbell Barker sided with Texas and over a dozen other Republican-led states, declaring the program illegal. The Keeping Families Together program was expected to benefit some half-a-million mixed-status families.

Media reports say that even if Biden's Justice Department appeals the ruling, the case is likely to stretch into the incoming anti-immigrant Trump administration.

[SOURCE: DEMOCRACY NOW]

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/369488-trump-allies-gleefully-flaunt-rar-right-plans-in-wake-of-us-elections-saying-project-2025-is-the-agenda>

Radio Habana Cuba