

Cuban troubadour Eduardo Sosa's health condition remains critical, but with hemodynamic stability

Image not found or type unknown

Havana, February 5 (RHC)-- The renowned Cuban troubadour Eduardo Sosa remains in critical condition and with a reserved prognosis, according to the latest medical report issued on February 5 at 7:00 a.m. In the last few hours, stability has been recorded in his vital signs, specifically in his blood pressure, which remains within normal values.

The well-known and well-loved musician, an emblematic figure of the new Cuban trova, remains intubated and under mechanical ventilation assistance in the Intensive Care Unit (ICU) of a hospital center that has not been specified.

The report highlights that his general condition remains serious, but highlights that the medical teams have managed to stabilize his hemodynamics, a crucial factor to avoid immediate complications.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/nacionales/375904-cuban-troubadour-eduardo-sosas-health-condition-remains-critical-but-with-hemodynamic-stability>

Radio Habana Cuba