

Washington Post refuses to run ad critical of Elon Musk

Image not found or type unknown

Washington, February 19 (RHC)-- The Washington Post, which is owned by billionaire Jeff Bezos, has refused to run a wraparound ad from Common Cause that called for Trump to fire Elon Musk.

The ad showed a picture of Musk and the White House with the words, "Who's running this country: Donald Trump or Elon Musk?"

In other news, the Trump administration's latest attack on the press has Elon Musk calling for the jailing of staff at "60 Minutes" after the CBS program aired a segment criticizing his push to freeze USAID funding.

A "60 Minutes" report on Sunday included this line: "The world's richest man cut off aid for the world's poorest people."

Musk responded on his social media platform by writing: "60 Minutes are the biggest liars in the world! They deserve a long prison sentence."

President Trump already has a pending $20 billion lawsuit against CBS over a different "60 Minutes" segment.

[SOURCE: DEMOCRACY NOW]

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/376884-washington-post-refuses-to-run-ad-critical-of-elon-musk>

Radio Habana Cuba