

Trump administration pulls intelligence pick after his views on Israeli genocide in Gaza surfaced

Image not found or type unknown

Washington, March 15 (RHC)-- The Donald Trump administration has withdrawn Daniel Davis for the post of deputy director of national intelligence for mission integration after his views against the Israeli genocide in Gaza came to light.

The withdrawal came after multiple pro-Zionist organizations and political commentators attacked Davis for his statements on Israel's actions in Palestine as well as his supportive comments towards Iran.

In a statement posted Wednesday on X, the pro-Zionist Anti Defamation League (ADL) claimed that the appointment of Davis would be "extremely dangerous."

"He has diminished Hamas's 10/7 attack, undermined US support for Israel's right to defend itself, and blatantly denies the grave threat the Iranian regime poses to global stability and American interests," the official ADL account wrote on X.

Davis is a retired U.S. Army lieutenant colonel who participated in the U.S. invasion of Afghanistan. After returning from Afghanistan, Davis became a vocal critic of America's wars in West Asia, later joining the Defense Priorities think tank, which advocates for reducing America's military involvement.

Davis has criticized Israel's atrocities in Gaza, stating that the Israeli regime "continues to kill kids and civilians without remorse or military necessity."

He has also criticized Israeli prime minister Benjamin Netanyahu's involvement in U.S. politics, claiming that he is "playing the U.S. like a cheap fiddle" while calling Washington's support for Israel's genocide a "stain on our character as a nation."

Davis has also stated that Iran's operation "True promise I" (the retaliation against an Israeli attack on Iran's embassy) was justified.

Had Davis been appointed, he would have served under the new director of national intelligence, Tulsi Gabbard.

Gabbard herself has also come under attack by war hawks in the U.S. political establishment for her positions on the various conflicts in West Asia.

The national intelligence director has repeatedly criticized Western support for militants in the Syrian conflict, stating that over five hundred million dollars in American taxpayer money was funneled to Syria, which ended up arming al-Qaeda.

Because of these statements, Gabbard was accused of "repeating" Russian, Syrian and Iranian information during her Senate confirmation hearing.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/378802-trump-administration-pulls-intelligence-pick-after-his-views-on-israeli-genocide-in-gaza-surfaced>

Radio Habana Cuba