

Cuba-U.S. Talks in Havana Set for January 21-22

Orlando, January 9 (RHC)-- The United States later this month is sending its highest level delegation to Cuba in decades for talks on migration and normalizing ties, according to the Orlando Sentinel newspaper on Thursday.

The U.S. State Department says Roberta Jacobson, a top diplomat for Latin America, will lead the U.S. delegation to Havana for the talks on January 21st and 22nd.

State Department spokeswoman Jen Psaki says the talks will focus on how to "create safe, legal and orderly migration between the United States and Cuba." In addition, conversations will begin regarding the process initiated by Presidents Barack Obama and Raul Castro last month to re-establish U.S.-Cuban relations after more than 50 years of estrangement.

The last U.S.-Cuba migration meeting occurred in Washington in July 2014.
