

International Anthropology Congress Opens in Havana

Havana, March 10 (RHC) — Havana's Palace of Conventions is hosting since Monday the International Convention Anthropology 2015 and the Third IberoAmerican Congress of Anthropology, attended by delegates from around the world.

These meetings were convened by the Museum and the Chair of Anthropology of the Faculty of Biology of Havana University, chaired by doctor Antonio Martínez, and by the Faculty of Anthropologic Studies at the University of Mexico.

Anthropologists from the hemisphere and elsewhere will be joined by archeologists, architects, Sociologists, psychologists, urban planners, economists, demographers, politologists, historians and other professionals.

Round Tables and Panels will be held on such issues as original peoples, demography, aging, human ecology, nutrition, ethics, sports and work.

Other issues related to anthropology will be also dealt with, such as politics, racism, religion, culture, the arts, the economy, philosophy and linguistics.

The meeting is being cosponsored by the Latin American Association of Biological Anthropology, the Cuban Institute of Anthropology, and the Fernando Ortiz Foundation.

The International Convention and the Ibero-American Congress on Anthropology will session until this coming Friday at Havana's Palace of the Conventions.
