

Australian research brings malaria vaccine closer

MELBOURNE, March 18 (Xinhua) -- A team of Australian researchers are a step closer to finding a vaccine to prevent malaria, after discovering patterns in the human immune system that helps fight the disease in its early stages.

The team from the Burnet Institute in Melbourne collaborated with universities from Australia, Britain and Africa to develop the research over a ten year period.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/internacionales/49781-australian-research-brings-malaria-vaccine-closer>

Radio Habana Cuba