

Attacks Against Mexican Journalists Is Up by 80% Under Peña Nieto

Mexico City, March 25 (teleSUR-RHC) Attacks and threats against Mexican journalists increased by 80 percent over the past two years, according to a report published Tuesday.

Article 19, a human rights organization focused on the defense and promotion of freedom of expression, presented the report titled "state of censorship." The document states that under the administration of President Enrique Peña Nieto, an attack against a journalist takes place every 26.7 hours, compared to one every 48.1 hours during the presidency of Felipe Calderon.

During the first two years Peña Nieto's government, 656 assaults, 10 murders and 4 disappearances, including 122 attacks on female journalists have been reported.

The release of the report comes as controversy continues to swirl around the firing of Carmen Aristegui, one of Mexico's most well-known journalist.

Aristegui has stated that a dispute with her employer, MVS Radio, began as a result of a story she aired implicating Peña Nieto and his wife with the purchase of a house from a government contractor. She has also stated that she thinks the firing could only have come with Peña Nieto's "blessing."

According to international organizations, Mexico is one of the most dangerous countries in the world for journalists with the highest levels of unsolved crimes against press employees. Authorities say criminal organizations target journalists to silence the press in the areas they operate.

"Fear, impunity and violence are things that are too common for the press in Mexico," Article 19 said.

Reporters Without Borders says at least 100 media workers have been killed since 2000, most of which remain unsolved.
