

CheapAir to Sell Direct U.S.-Cuba Flights Online

Cuba Flights are Live on CheapAir!

Wahoo! Your trip to Cuba is just clicks away. But before you commit, we want to give you a heads up about some important details:

- Travel to Cuba from the U.S.A. is only legally permitted for 12 approved reasons, and (unfortunately) hitting the beach isn't one of them. A license is no longer required, but prior to completing your purchase you will be asked which of the authorized reasons applies for you.
- To fly to Cuba, federal regulations require you to book separate tickets -- one from the U.S. to Mexico and another from Mexico to Cuba. Luckily, CheapAir will package it all together and let you make one seamless purchase!
- If you are checking luggage, you will have to collect your bags in Mexico City and then re-check them on to Havana.
- If you need to cancel or change, or if the airline initiates a schedule change, the policies and penalties of each airline will be applied separately.

View Flights to Cuba

Los Angeles, April 11 (RHC) – U.S. travelers will be able to purchase online tickets for direct flights from New York, Miami and Tampa, Fla., to Cuba starting Wednesday on CheapAir, the first online travel retailer to offer such bookings, the Los Angeles Times reports.

"Charter flights to Cuba are nothing new," Jeff Klee, CheapAir's chief executive officer, said Friday. "What we're doing that is new is bringing online booking to it."

Travelers can buy tickets Wednesday and travel immediately, Klee said.

Daily flights from Miami to Havana cost $481 round-trip, including tax, Klee said. Charter flights also fly from New York once a week and Tampa twice a week. U.S. travelers also may book flights to other Cuban cities such as Santa Clara, Santiago and Cienfuegos.

CheapAir has partnered with one charter company, Cuba Travel Service, to offer the flights on its website.

<https://www.radiohc.cu/index.php/en/noticias/nacionales/52353-cheapair-to-sell-direct-us-cuba-flights-online>

Radio Habana Cuba