Football

Argentinean star soccer player Lionel Messi denied having received 3.5 million euros as a compensation for his recent visit to Gabon, France Football magazine reported today.

According to the French magazine, the Barcelona star received a sum of money for his indirect support to Gabonese President Ali Bongo, it was claimed on Tuesday.

Messi has requested France Football to correct the information, which he said it was offensive. The sources affirm that Messi traveled to Gabon due to his friendship with the former manager of the Barcelona Football Club Alejandro Echevarría and his friendship with Cameroonian soccer player Samuel Eto, whose foundation Messi promise to support. Messi traveled to Gabon personally invited by Gabonese President Ali Bongo to lay the first stone at a future Africa Cup of Nations venue.

FIFA to Decide President Election Date

FIFA's executive committee is to meet at the soccer world governing body's headquarters next Monday to set the president election date.

FIFA leader Sepp Blatter held talks with his vice presidents late Sunday ahead of a meeting to set a date for an election. The group discussed the date, but sources at the talks with top officials from 5 of the regional confederations would not say if they agreed when the vote should be held.

None of the regional leaders are yet candidates for the election but UEFA president, Frenchman Michel Platini, 60, is considering a run.

The meeting was held one day after former FIFA vice president Jeffrey Webb appeared in a New York court and pleaded not guilty to accepting bribes. He was released on 10 million dollars in bail.

Blatter was reelected to a 5th term on May 29th, just 2 days after Webb and six other FIFA officials were arrested in a raid on the luxury Zurich hotel where Sunday's meeting took place.
