

South African Vice President Says Cuba is the Right Place to Do Business

Havana, October 23 (RHC)-- Cuba is the right place to do business, according to South African Vice President Cyril Ramaphosa, who reiterated in Havana his country's interest in expanding economic and commercial links with the Caribbean nation.

Ramaphosa said he came to Cuba with a large South African delegation, which proves the importance they give to the bilateral forum on trade between the two nations. The forum took place at the headquarters of the Cuba Foreign Trade and Investment Ministry earlier this week.

The South African government official said that his country's entrepreneurial community is interested in participating in the upcoming Havana International Trade Fair and that Cuba and South Africa share special historic relations.
