

London Police Investigating Knife Attack in Metro Station

London, December 7 (RHC)-- In London, police are investigating Saturday's knife attack on a man at an East London metro station as a terrorist attack. British police say they were told the attacker shouted, "This is for Syria."

Richard Walton, counterterrorism police chief, said the attacker's motives are still unknown. Walton told reporters: "We've got a number of lines of inquiry, and we're pursuing this investigation with some speed to determine what happened, how it happened, and particularly the motive that lies behind the attack."
